Eritrea denies targeting Ethiopia dam as Egyptian ties deepen

Ref: 22 May 2017

Eritrean President Isaias Afwerki denied his country's deepening relations with Egypt signify plans to disrupt neighboring Ethiopia's construction of Africa's biggest hydropower dam.

Egypt's government has claimed Ethiopia's construction of the hydropower dam on the main tributary of the Nile River contravenes colonial-era treaties that grant it the right to the bulk of the river's water. Ethiopian officials reject the accords as obsolete and unjust.

The plant, being built at a cost of $6.4 billion, is scheduled for completion next year and will produce as much as 6,450 megawatts of power.
